

HASS Rubric: Supported Self-Rehoming

What basic resources do Field Services Officers provide community members rehoming pets?

Beginner

Resources are made available to pet owners rehoming pets that cover topics of basic care recommendations such as routing medical recommendations and managing minor behavior considerations in the home. These resources are meant to improve the likelihood that a pet can be easily self-rehomed.

Intermediate

Resources are made available to pet owners rehoming pets that cover topics of basic care recommendations such as routing medical recommendations and managing minor behavior considerations in the home. Resources for supported self-rehoming should also include best practices for marketing pets such as improving photo quality and writing pet biographies. These resources are meant to improve the likelihood that a pet can be easily self-rehomed.

Advanced

Resources are made available to pet owners rehoming pets that cover topics of basic care recommendations such as routing medical recommendations and managing minor behavior considerations in the home. Resources for supported self-rehoming should also include best practices for marketing pets such as improving photo quality and writing pet biographies. In addition to providing resources, officers provide direct referrals to local support services and established partners to receive free or low-cost medical, behavior, or other pet support options.
